Investment policy and market outlook

Your investment objective: 6 - 20% Equity 80% Fixed Income

Thank you for entrusting us with the management of your account. We believe the stock market will soon break out of this year's tight range to the upside as investors shift their focus beyond the political and regulatory uncertainties posed by the tight presidential race.

We generally recommend maintaining an allocation to the stock market above baseline by 5 percentage points, with a 10-percentage-point underweight in the bond market and an allocation of 5% to cash.

ELECTION REFLECTIONS

While we believe the impact of the election on market performance is likely to be secondary to the influence of the fundamentals of economic and profit performance, it may be useful to reflect on the historical patterns of market performance following presidential elections.

The historical pattern of recent decades suggests that the stock market may fare better in 2005 if the incumbent, President Bush, were re-elected to another term. However, we doubt that the market will yield results near the average for incumbents in recent decades, no matter the outcome of the election. We expect the stock market to post a gain of around 8% in 2005, below the average for incumbents and in line with the best year for challengers in recent decades.

It is interesting that while there does appear to be some degree of predictability for stock market performance depending on an election outcome, there is little predictability in the outcome of a presidential election based on stock market performance. Franklin D. Roosevelt was re-elected in a landslide victory in 1940 despite losses in the S&P 500® in the third and fourth years of his term. Harry Truman and Richard Nixon also were re-elected with lackluster stock market results. Moreover, incumbent party candidate Al Gore was unable to hold onto the White House in 2000 despite a nearly 80% gain in the S&P 500® in the four years from 1997 through 2000, George H. W. Bush lost in 1992 even with a 57% gain in the stock market during his tenure, and Adlai Stevenson lost even though the market rose 75% in 1949-52 under his party's administration.

The bond market's sensitivity to the issues of trade and fiscal policy results in a response to the election outcome. Although bonds have fared better during the first year of a Republican term in the White House, even if the president is re-elected we expect a flat to down year for bonds in 2005.

The major stock market indexes are nearly unchanged from the start of the year after following a narrow, range-bound path. As we highlighted earlier this year, a range-bound market has been a common occurrence during election years—occurring in eight of the past nine. We believe the stock market will soon break out of this year's tight range to the upside as investors shift their focus beyond the political and regulatory uncertainties posed by the tight presidential race.

We generally recommend maintaining an allocation to the stock market above baseline by 5 percentage points, with a 10-percentage-point underweight in the bond market and an allocation of 5% to cash.

Investment Strategy Recommendations

We recommend a weighting 5-percentage-points above the neutral level for the allocation in stocks and a weighting 10-percentage-points below neutral for bonds, the lowest weighting within the range. We recommend a 5% allocation to cash. We lean toward large-capitalization stocks and have a bias toward the growth style of investing. Our recommended international exposure remains at our baseline neutral weighting. We recommend a 15-20% shorter-than-average duration for bond portfolios and remain neutral with regard to credit quality. We recommend an allocation to the alternative asset class of 10% for a balanced allocation to complement the allocation among traditional asset classes.
